How does that deal work? I'm not sure I want Facebook people looking into my life. Bob

Don't let the Horse Fly spoil your Picnic. I'm here to enjoy the hobby, and enjoy the cars no matter what they look like.

Re: MAFCA's new Facebook

This will be OK if we can view the site without joining FB. There are too many sites that require that you sign up for FB in order to see their content, and I have a personal visceral aversion to that.

If we're all here, why would we want to go there?

You do have to search for the full name. MARC has a page, too.

I'm no longer mentally 12.

One wireless provider advertised, "You can hook up to 9 hand held devices through our system"! Is this INSANE?? I just noticed that I ONLY have 2 hands! What are all these DEVICES??? Enlighten me PLEASE.
With all the info floating around in space, one of these days all these systems will go "BROOOMPHTAH"!! and we can get back to important, fun, & meaningful things! Bill W.

Dumped my FB account several years ago...genuine waste of time. Just think, if you had bought FB stock on the IPO, you'd have lost enough money to buy another Model A!

NO one looks into your life to start with.. and YES the entire world is Facebook crazy..with over 100 million users your products and services can be seen by so many people, it helps to promote the hobby greatly...before you criticize...give it a try..you might surprise your self!

Thank you

If you don't like Facebook, don't use it. Your choice.

However Ford Barn is a Facebook format, and you are here.

Thank you to the people who took the time and consideration to build this site. Now if I have an open weekend I can find a local event or meet that I can go to.

Please don't post borderline nasty comments or criticize, it may stop people from developing these things, or sharing them here.

Thank you.

I don't understand the need for some to complain about anything that help promotes the hobby...
